Recently, the station and its crew have endured some changes due to COVID-19. Here is Alexandria White with more on the story. ALEXANDRIA The student organization, P-V-U Kno Radio, has refused to let the COVID-19 pandemic stop them. They continue to create and produce content for the P-V-A-M-U student body to enjoy. The switch to online communication due to C-D-C guidelines denies them access to the station in Hilliard Hall as a resource, but the crew has taken to new platforms. With social media sites and apps such as Instagram, P-V-U Kno Radio has live-streamed with guests, played music on their station, and uplifted spirits of all who tune in to their shows and performances. ALEXANDRIA Still, some adjustments have shifted the dynamic of the team, and they must adapt. EVELYN To keep going, we are still talking in our Groupme, being active on social media to keep that presence (because we are still at school technically) and making sure that our new Eboard will get to meet and be with each other (not physically) but through Zoom, so they can keep working.	3

(:5) ALEXANDRIA The adjustment to working remotely has dampened the spirits of the crew a bit, but they have not lost hope. EVELYN (COVID-19) really affected the students and the members who actually do on-air things, that have their shows and their shifts, are getting drops and things like that. It's affected their process because now they can't come into the station and work on that anymore and have that outlet- just another place to express themselves, be creative, and work on their craft. (:17) ALEXANDRIA While the COVID-19 pandemic has impacted people all over the globe, we are proud of our panthers for remaining productive. I'm Alexandria White with P-V-A-M-U T-V.
